I would have said that six years ago, but modern 4chan suffers from textbook groupthink. If you post anything political that isn't aligned with the far-right, you're guaranteed to get several replies within a minute reminding you that the opinion you expressed is not an official 4chan™ opinion and accusing you of being from an outgroup like Reddit or Tumblr. There's definitely less diversity of opinion on 4chan now than what there used to be, which is weird in a way, because anonymous communities are supposed to be immune to the kind of social pressure that stops people from expressing certain opinions.

>which is weird in a way, because anonymous communities are supposed to be immune to the kind of social pressure that stops people from expressing certain opinions.
I see people say that a lot, and I'm not really sure where it comes from. Anonymous communities are exactly where I'd expect to find strong groupthink, because any conversation can be turned around by sheer numbers.

I guess it just comes from the idea that reputation doesn't matter, so in theory, you shouldn't have to worry about what others will think about what you're going to post. I see where you're coming from though. There are probably other aspects of anonymity that encourage groupthink too, like how each post stands alone, so people feel the need to constantly prove they're part of the ingroup to be taken seriously.

They use both directions. They may or may not add dots, curvature, and other stylization, since a lot of different groups got artistic over thousands of years.

For unicode,

Unicode 5.2 in 2009 added

Many fonts (including mine) don't have the tibetan block symbols. According to:

><http://babelstone.blogspot.com/2006/02/when-is-swastika-not-swastika.html>

However, five years after entering Unicode, these four characters are still very poorly represented in fonts, with a perhaps understandable reluctance of large companies to support characters which may be misconstrued as Nazi symbols. No fonts that ship with Windows XP, 7 or 8 include these characters,

This proposal was discussed at WG2 meeting 50 at Frankfurt, Germany during the week of 23–27 April 2007, although all such discussion and mention of the word "swastika" have been redacted from the minutes of the meeting. Luckily, I was present in person at the meeting, and remember much of the discussion. There was general consensus amongst the experts at the meeting that the four proposed characters should be encoded in principal, but there was concern that German anti-Nazi laws could land the ISO/IEC 10646 and Unicode Standards in legal trouble if the characters were encoded. However, the German delegates and meeting hosts assured the meeting that encoding these signs would not cause any problems as they are religious symbols, and use of religious swastika symbols was not illegal in Germany. Nevertheless, in order to ensure that users of the standard clearly understand that these swastika signs are intended for use as religious symbols, it was agreed that they should be encoded in the Tibetan block with Tibetan names.

Except this isn't about "getting flak," you retard. You've missed the whole point. I would expect any opinion to get flak on 4chan, because unlike most other websites, you are generally free to insult others for any reason. The problem is that there are a lot of people who's go-to response to opinions outside of a narrow range is to accuse the poster of being from an outgroup and to generally try to get them to leave. These are the same people who probably take pride in the fact that 4chan is a place where you can express any opinion.

The double standard is that there has been little or no controversy over the hammer and sickle unicode symbol. Which has no excuse of being an ancient widely used religious symbol.

I think you may be just perceiving things through your bias. When I post my right wing opinions I get often get shit on by leftists. Yes I'm not saying there are more leftists than right wingers, but it goes both ways.

Even on /pol/ you can find tons of posts by people who aren't onboard with the far right stuff, even if they are a minority. The 4chan "algorithm" encourages controversy. Threads are sorted by what gets replies. (you)s are the only feedback. as opposed to reddit where even mildly controversial comments are heavily penalized.
